March 29th, 1891.

Deceased was united in marriage on the th of September, ISOO, to William Carty. So young, so tender and lovely to be snatch ed away from the loving embrace and kind affections of a loving husband, mother, father, brothers, sisters and friends. While their hearts are torn with grief at the loss of this dear departed one, she left evidence behind that it was her gain to be taken home to rest. Sister Martha professed a hope in Christ during her illness; she was conscious to the last minute, calling her friends around her one by one, telling them not to grieve for her for she was going home to Jesus and asked them to meet her in heaven. When asked if she was afraid of the sting of death she replied that death had no terror for her. She requested that the Rev. J. M. Nelson of Annapolis should preach her funeral. He preached to a large congregation at the residence of the deceased's mother, taking for his text Romans 14th chapter, 8th yerse At the close of the services a song was sung one she selected before she died. While singing the friends took the farewell look at the remains of Sister Martha. Her remains were taken to Pilot Knob, followed by a large concorse of friends and relatives, and deposited in the tomb to await the summons for the final resurrection.
